Lansing Police Public Information Officer

Robert Merritt, a 24 year veteran, is the department's Public Information Officer. Officer Merritt reports directly to the Chief of Police. The Public Information Officer is responsible for any and all communication to the media as it pertains to the Lansing Police Department. The Public Information Officer is the vital communication link between the Police Department and the community.

The Public Information Officer in a sense is the Liaison between the Chief of Police, the Lansing Police Department employees, City departments, media outlets, outside agencies/organizations, and the community conveying information related to events involving the Lansing Police Department and its activities.

Officer Merritt as the Public Information Officer is responsible for updating and maintains the Lansing Police Department's web site/page. As a continued service to the community, Officer Merritt relays pertinent information to the community by using social media as it relates to the Lansing Police Department.
